History of the Vigilant League of Peoples

The Vigilant League of Peoples was founded in 1968 by a group of activists in Chicago. The League was founded in response to the police brutality and racial injustice that was rampant in the city at the time. The League's early members included Fred Hampton, Bobby Rush, and Jesse Jackson.

In the early years, the League focused on fighting police brutality. The League organized protests, filed lawsuits, and lobbied for changes in police policy. The League also provided legal aid to victims of police brutality.

In the 1970s, the League expanded its focus to include other issues, such as voter suppression and economic inequality. The League worked to register voters, challenge discriminatory voting laws, and advocate for economic policies that benefited the poor and working class.

Today, the Vigilant League of Peoples continues to fight for justice and equality. The League works on a wide range of issues, including police brutality, voter suppression, and economic inequality. The League also provides legal aid to victims of injustice and advocates for reforms that will create a more just and equitable society.
